

Employers, regardless of their industry, generally share common expectations of their employees. Be willing to collaborate and contribute to the success of the business and you will excel in your own career. These are the types of things employers look for.

Possess a Passion for the Industry

Genuinely care about the work you do. Strive to make it better all the time, and you'll feel good knowing you're making a difference in your field.

Be On-time and Ready to Work

Arrive on time for your scheduled shifts, and if you can't make it, notify your supervisor beforehand. Your presence is vital, and excessive lateness and absences could jeopardise your employment.

Behave in a Professional Manner

Use your work hours solely for work-related activities; personal matters should be attended to outside of work. If a crisis arises, let your supervisor know and be sure to keep them updated.

Dress Appropriately

Dress according to the workplace standards, especially if there's a uniform or Personal Protective Clothing and Equipment required, for example high vis and hard hats. Your attire reflects the company's image, so be sure to dress professionally in clean and tidy clothes.

Be Helpful and Practise Your Problem-Solving Skills

Be willing to use your problem-solving skills to tackle challenges and find solutions. Always be courteous and assist anyone who enters your workplace, whether it's a customer, manager or co-worker.

Have a Positive Attitude and Communicate Concerns Early

Most employers want you to enjoy your work. This includes enjoying what you do and the people you work with. Maintain a positive attitude, but when things do get tough, raise your concerns or any issues with your supervisor promptly and privately for resolution.

Keep Confidential Things Confidential

Handle sensitive information with care, including customer details, business strategies, and financial data. Breaching confidentiality may lead to immediate dismissal.

Keep Track of Time

Complete your timesheets accurately and daily to ensure proper payment. Falsifying information could lead to termination.

Take Initiative

Approach tasks with enthusiasm, willingness to learn, and a proactive mindset. Even if a responsibility or task seems small, give it your best shot.

Get the Job Done

Complete your tasks diligently, seeking clarification when needed, to cultivate a strong work ethic. This opens doors to more engaging opportunities later and enhances your ability to work both independently and as part of a team.
